Cat Stevens, contemporary folk rock meets the Gods of Celtic songwriting
By Ewan MacColl. (Incidentally, in the last verse of the latter version, the name should be Christie, not Christy. John Christie was the mass murderer whose victims Tim Evans' wife and daughter became. He was hanged for his other crimes in 1953. Tim Evans' judicial murder contributed to the abolition of capital punishment in Britain, but it wasn't till many years later that he was formally declared innocent.

"Back When the Craic Was Grand"

Boston Blackthorne, <http://bostonblackthorne.com/>

from Better Late Than Never, <http://cdbaby.com/cd/blackthorne/from/celtic/>

This podcast is made possible thanks to the kind support of all the bands we played today. It comes to you absolutely free of charge, but there's a reason for that. If you enjoy the music you heard, drop by the band's website, join the mailing list, email them to let them know you heard them on the Irish & Celtic Music Podcast, and if you have a few bucks, buy a CD. We make our living by the generous support of people like you. So return the favor by buying a CD.

And if you don't have money right now, you can also help out the Irish & Celtic Music Podcast by adding a link to CelticMusicPodcast.com or open up your email and type in the email address of your best friend who you think might enjoy the podcast, and tell them to stop by, download and listen.

Next time music from Niamh Parsons, Sarah Dinan, and Heather Dale in a special feature on Celtic women. Call 512-879-6398 or email marc at the bards.net to make a song request. Find out more about the podcast at <http://www.celticmusicpodcast.com/>
